INTRODUCTION

1. Off on the prai-rie, where the balmy air Kiss-es the wav-ing corn,
2. Rose is a la-dy yet from early dawn, La-bors her skillful hand;
3. Clerks from the ci-ty, plowmen from the field, Lords from a for-eign land;

There lives a farmer, with a daughter fair— Fair as a summer's morn.
 She is the housewife, now her mother's gone— Gone to the bet-ter land.
 Each in their turn have ver-y humbly kneeled— Kneeled for her heart and hand.

She has a na-ture gentle as a dove, Pure as the mountain snows;
 Rose has the beau-ty— father has the gold— Both will be hers one day;
 But to them all she made the same re-ply— Kind-ly but firm-ly, "No!"

Say! is it strange that every one should love— Love such a girl as Rose?
 For she is young, while he is growing old— Old people pass a way.
 And none but I can tell the rea-son why— Why she should treat them so.
